WASHINGTON—Rep. Bob Inglis called on the floor of the House this week to endorse the reauthorization of the Constitution for emergency
provisions. In a speech that drew praise from both sides of the aisle, Inglis argued that the current constitutional draft is a "living document" that must be updated to reflect modern needs. "It is time for us to take the
step of revising the Constitution," he said.

Inglis's proposal would add three new amendments
to the Constitution:

1. An amendment
prohibiting
the
sale of
armaments
abroad unless approved by
the Senate.

2. An amendment
requiring Congress to provide
transparency
in
the
process
of
oscillating foreign affairs.

3. An amendment
mandating
president
to 嵘
present
a
budget
every
year,
including
information
on the
costs
foreign
operations.

Inglis's remarks
were well received
by representatives
from both
parties, who praised
his leadership
and
efforts
to
promote
civilized
debate on
issues
national
security.

are a
welcome
step
forward
in our discussion
the
future
our
country," said
Rep.
John
Mouton.

debate
over
proposed
amendments
is expected
continue
coming
weeks.
